

Summer Research Program in Global Health

 Washington
University in St. Louis

INSTITUTE FOR PUBLIC HEALTH

The Center for Global Health (CGH) at the Institute for Public Health is starting a new Summer Research Program in Global Health (SRPGH) to offer students the opportunity to work closely with outstanding faculty mentors focusing on global health.

PROGRAM BENEFITS

- Work in a cutting-edge science and technology environment
- Gain exposure to top investigators and diverse research topics
- Receive individualized career counseling and develop career interests
- Build a social network with student peers and faculty
- Receive a stipend of $2000 and a free Metrolink transit pass
- For students coming from out of town, travel to and from St. Louis will be covered

The SRPGH is open to: full-time college undergraduates; graduate students pursuing a Master in Public Health (MPH), Social Work (MSW), or Population Health Sciences (MPHS); and medical students looking to gain experience in the field of global health research.

The goal of the program is to expose young investigators to research in a lab or field-based setting and further their interest in global health. The program includes didactic sessions and seminars, and is an opportunity to establish a career-building network.

Applications accepted: November 1, 2013 through February 1, 2014

Program runs: June 1 through July 31, 2014

More details: publichealth.wustl.edu/global or contact Jacaranda van Rheenen, PhD, Manager, CGH, jvanrheenen@dom.wustl.edu